FORD FOUNDATION AWARDS $250K GRANT TO SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY LAW CENTER IN SUPPORT OF DISABILITY RIGHTS WORK

Despite the increased presence of students with disabilities in higher education, people with disabilities have not achieved workplace equality and remain underrepresented in the American workforce. To assist in efforts to achieve educational and workplace equality, Southern University Law Center (SULC) has received a $250,000 grant from the Ford Foundation's U.S. Disability Rights Program. The grant will support SULC Professor Katherine Macfarlane's work with the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights as the Department gathers public input and considers possible updates to the historic Section 504 regulations.

The Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights enforces several federal civil rights laws, including Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which prohibits disability discrimination by entities that receive federal funding. At the completion of her work with the Office for Civil Rights, Professor Macfarlane will work with SULC to develop course offerings and other measures to serve people with disabilities in Louisiana and beyond.

"Katherine Macfarlane is a dedicated disability rights advocate and longtime ally of students with disabilities. The Ford Foundation is proud to support her work collaborating with the Department Education where she will take on the important work of modernizing Section 504 regulations to better meet the needs of today's students and strengthening the next generation of disabled leaders," said Rebecca Cokley, Ford Foundation Program Officer for U.S. Disability Rights.

Professor Macfarlane's recent disability rights advocacy has focused on improving the educational experience of law students with disabilities, and on protecting high-risk people with disabilities in the workplace during the COVID-19 pandemic. Last year, she co-founded an affinity group for disabled law professors and allies, the first of its kind. She has also served as chair of the Association of American Law Schools' Disability Law Section. Her scholarship and advocacy draw upon her own experiences as a disabled student, lawyer, and law professor. Professor Macfarlane joined the Law Center in 2021.
